On 20th January 1918 the first two companies of the 30th United States Engineer Regiment, which later became the First Gas Regiment, arrived for training under Major Weinberg, and they were put through the same course of lectures and practical work as regular recruits. Early in March this training had been completed, and two of the companies were distributed among our own in the front line to gain practical experience. They assisted with great skill and gallantry in several gas operations on the First, Second and Fourth Army fronts, after which they joined their own Expeditionary Force.
